An illustration of a man and a woman standing next to a broken hourglass. The hourglass is shattered, with sand spilling out onto the ground. The man is wearing a suit and holding a paper, while the woman is wearing a light-colored jacket and red pants, also holding a paper. The scene is set against a dark background with a spotlight effect on the hourglass and the couple.

An Actor.
An Improviser.

Magical Lying Hour

Every Night is Opening Night.

Magical Lying Hour

An actor prepares and an improviser germinates. These two disciplines influence each other, but rarely blend until now.

Magical Lying Hour is a stage show that pairs an actor performing her lines, drawn from contemporary plays, with an improviser making his up to create something which is often funny, frequently tender, and always unique. Over the last eight years Magical Lying Hour has entertained audiences across the country with this kind of performance.

In this short film they take their form to the logical extreme: after performing a scene as usual they take the improvised lines, give them to a new actor and repeat the process again! With an international cast Magical Lying Hour seeks to tease out meaning from chaos, teamwork from disunity, and comedy from the self-serious.
